Get going with a wheelchair that fits your needs

Choose a Karma wheelchair based on your unique lifestyle, body dimensions, symptoms or condition, and budget. The ideal wheelchair should enhance one's mobility and quality of life in addition to minimizing the chances of secondary injuries. The wrong wheelchair can increase the chance of various side effects caused by long-term use.

Just 3 Steps to pick the right wheelchair

Etiquettes for Non-Wheelchair Users

The most important thing you need to remember when meeting someone in a wheelchair is to talk to the person and not to the disability.

- Shake hand with the wheelchair users hand even if they appear to have limited function of their hands.
- Don't be afraid of personal contact (where appropriate) it can open up communication.
- If the wheelchair user is accompanied by a caregiver don't talk only to the caregiver, speak to the disabled person directly.
- Don't stare at the chair, make normal eye contact
- For prolonged conversations allow yourself to sit down so that you are both on the same level
- Try to talk as normally as possible. Don't worry about offending the person if you say something wrong.
- Think the wheelchair as a part of the users body
- Don't rest your foot on the wheel chair or hang on items of clothing in it.
- Don't push or move the chair unless specially asked to do by the user
- If you think that a wheelchair user needs assistance ask before you help.
- Never put a wheelchair users on the back or slop their leg as a goodwill gesture. This could result in muscle spasms or loss of balance.

Don't be afraid to ask !

There is no harm for asking something you are unsure of in a polite manner. Ask the disabled person to clarify the query you have it is in the wheelchair users best interest to make it known if they have any special requirements that you should be aware of.
